Biography/History

Edward Sheffield Stephenson was born in Algona, Iowa in 1917, and was raised in Glendale, California. Stephenson obtained a degree from the Pasadena Playhouse College of the Theatre, and began working as a theatrical director and art director during the late 1930s before serving a term in the Air Force during World War II. After World War II, Stephenson continued a career with the U.S. military, serving as the civilian Director of Entertainment and Music for the Commander-in-Chief, Far East and Supreme Commander, Allied Powers. He then returned to theater in Los Angeles, but was quickly hired by NBC as a staff designer where he led the art department's transition from early television to the age of color. In the mid-1960's he began a long association with the team of Bud Yorkin and Norman Lear, who collaborated on his most famous projects including Start the Revolution Without Me (1970), All in the Family (1968), and Sanford & Son (1972). His long collaboration with Paul Witt, Tony Thomas, and Susan Harris brought to light hits including Benson (1979), It's A Living (1980), The Golden Girls (1985) and Empty Nest (1988). In the late 1970s, his desire to increase the quality of the decoration of his sets for television and film led him to create Hollywood Studio Gallery. The extensive collection is located in the former Technicolor laboratories, which became, over more than three decades, the leading source of original and reproduced art used in motion picture and television production.

Stephenson won three Emmy Awards for An Evening with Fred Astaire (1959), The Andy Williams Show (1967), and Soap (1978). He was also nominated for three Emmys for his work on The Danny Kaye Show (1964), The Andy Williams Show (1966), and The Golden Girls (1986). He was inducted into the Art Directors Guild Hall of Fame in 2013.

Organization and Arrangement

The set photographs are stored in 35 archival photo boxes. Image research files on a variety of topics are stored in two filing cabinet drawers in folders labeled by subject. Production art illustrations are housed in six flat file cabinet drawers and set construction drawings are stored in nine flat file cabinet drawers.

Container List

All materials for the Collection are stored 35 photo storage boxes, two filing cabinet drawers and fifteen flat file cabinet drawers in the Archives at the Art Directors Guild.
